It is written, “It will be when you enter the land that the L-RD your G-d gives you...you shall take of the first of every fruit of the ground...and you shall put it in a basket and go to the place that the L-RD your G-d will choose to make His Name rest there. You shall come to the priest who will be in those days...and the priest shall take the basket from your hand” (Deuteronomy 26:1-4).

We know just how powerful the evil inclination is, for it can infuse a person’s heart with pride in order to chase him from this world. As the Sages have said, “Envy, lust, and honor-seeking drive a man from the world” (Perkei Avoth 4:21). As such, not only will a person lose this world, but the World to Come as well.

In fact the Holy One, blessed be He, detests the proud, as it is written: “Every haughty person is an abomination to the L-RD” (Proverbs 16:5).

Although he was a great hero, King David's heart did not wax proud. Instead he regarded himself as nothing, as he said: “I am a worm and not a man, the scorn of humanity, despised of people” (Psalms 22:7). He also said, “My heart was not proud, and my eyes were not haughty” (ibid. 131:1). He fully realized that all he possessed originated from Hashem, which is why he fought against the evil inclination as it tried to convince him to take advantage of the honor bestowed upon him by the Holy One, blessed be He. In fact King David chose to devote all his abilities and strength to increasing the glory of Hashem.

When the Children of Israel were about to enter the land of Israel, a land flowing with milk and honey (Exodus 3:8) – “a land where you will eat bread without poverty; you will lack nothing there” (Deuteronomy 8:9) – the Holy One, blessed be He, was concerned that wealth would lead the people to become proud and forget their Creator. As we read, “Yeshurun became fat and kicked – you became fat, you became thick, you became corpulent – and it deserted G-d to the exile in Egypt” (Deuteronomy 32:15).

Hence the Holy One, blessed be He, reminded them not to forget that they had been slaves in Egypt for 400 years. The land of Israel had not been given to them on account of their own merit, but because of the Patriarchs Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who had wholeheartedly served Hashem by completely yielding to Him. Thus they had no reason to grow proud, especially since the gift of the land was based on the condition that Jews study Torah and observe mitzvot. Otherwise the Holy One, blessed be He, would take it from them and send them into exile.

This idea is alluded to in the expression ki tavo (“when you enter” [Deuteronomy 26:1]), the word tavo having a numerical value of 403. Of this amount, 400 corresponds to the years of oppression they endured, as it is written: “Your offspring shall be aliens in a land not their own...and they will oppress 400 years” (Genesis 15:13), while 3 corresponds to the three Patriarchs, to whom Hashem promised the land after the exile in Egypt.

This is why Hashem commanded that the first fruits be brought to the Temple and that people declare, “My father was a wandering Aramean, and he went down into Egypt...The Egyptians mistreated us and afflicted us, and they placed hard work upon us” (Deuteronomy 26:5-6). As such they would never forget their past, when they were slaves in Egypt, nor the fact that they inherited the land due to the merit of the holy Patriarchs, though only on condition that they study Torah and perform mitzvot. Therefore everything the Children of Israel had was given to them entirely as a gift, which would obviously lead them to humility, the opposite of pride, which destroys all that is good within people. This is why they went to the Temple with their baskets in hand to thank Hashem for having led them to the land of their forefathers, as it is written: “He brought us to this place and gave us this land, a land flowing with milk and honey. And now, behold, I have brought the first fruits of the ground that You have given me, O L-RD” (vv.9-10). By thanking Hashem for all the good that He did for them, they never entertained forbidden thoughts such as, “My power and the might of my hand have gotten me this wealth.”

This is some of the advice that the Torah gives a person in order to prevent pride from making its way into him and causing him to lose the world. In general, when a person becomes wealthy and his thoughts focus on his business, he begins to study less Torah. In fact the wealthier he becomes, the further he strays from the words of Torah. Pride certainly comes to occupy the space created by the diminishment of his study, in which case he is liable to entertain wicked thoughts.

Because of our many sins, today the Temple no longer stands. Therefore the place where a tzaddik lives is like the Temple, and the tzaddik is like the High Priest who officiates there. When a person learns how to serve Hashem from the tzaddik, it is as if he had brought an offering to the Temple.

Furthermore, when we bring a gift to the tzaddik and see how he serves Hashem in a completely unselfish way, our hearts will begin to melt. We will then repent and become completely different people. In that case it is like bringing the first fruits to the Temple, as the Sages have said: “One who brings a gift to a scholar, it is as if he had offered first fruits” (Ketubot 105b). This is the meaning of the verse, “When you enter the land that the L-RD your G-d gives you” – remember that it is only your land when you follow the path of the Patriarchs, and remember that you were a stranger for 400 years. The land does not belong to you – for “the land is Mine” (Leviticus 25:23), and I gave it to your fathers “and their descendants after them” (Deuteronomy 1:8) – but only on condition that they do not grow proud on account of their wealth. Let them not think that the power of their own hand has brought them this.

Above all, from here a person must learn that if he was poor and has become rich, he must remember his poverty. He must remember that it was only because of Hashem’s compassion and the merit of the holy Patriarchs that he was given this gift. Hence he has no reason to grow proud, for just as Hashem made him wealthy, so too can He reclaim this wealth if he fails to follow the right path.
Having Everything, Yet Having Nothing

It is written, “The L-RD will send in your midst curse, confusion…” (Deuteronomy 28:20).

Rashi explains: “Curse – similar to ‘an affliction that causes loss’ [Leviticus 13:51]. Confusion – the sound of panic.”

This is one of the verses of reбуке, dealing with a sense of loss, a sense of confusion and anxiety. A person can experience such feelings despite lacking nothing. To understand how this can happen, let us look at a story drawn from Yalkut Shimoni (Mishlei 950).

Rabbi Dostai, a disciple of Rabbi Meir, was once studying the verse: “The tzaddik eats to satisfy his soul, but the stomach of the wicked suffers want” (Proverbs 13:25). Rabbi Dostai thought, “I can understand that a tzaddik eats to satisfy himself, for the tzaddikim are content with little, just like Rabbi Chanina ben Dosa. But what does it mean that the stomach of the wicked suffers want? We know of wicked people who enjoy fame and glory, and who eat to satisfaction every day, so what could they be lacking?” Finding no answer to his question, Rabbi Dostai addressed his teacher Rabbi Meir, who recounted the following incident: “In our town there lived a Roman idolater who was as rich as Korach. One day he invited all the residents in town to a great feast, and on it were beautiful and precious utensils and the finest glassware. All kinds of food were present, including the most beautiful fruit produced in our land, as well as fruit from distant lands. The guests ate and drank everything, while we Jews were content on eating fruit. The Roman owner of the house stuffed himself with food, but his face looked discontent. His eyes were always looking at his plate, as if he was searching for something. He eventually turned to his servant in anger and said, “Where are my tender pecans, the ones that can be broken by hand?” His servant replied, “Please don’t get angry, my lord. We’ve looked for these nuts, but we couldn’t find them anywhere.” Upon hearing this, the man became furious, and in his anger he arose and broke the table, which alone cost 300 pieces of silver! This caused all the precious utensils to come crashing to the ground, as well as all the food. We, the guests, were stunned and terrified by this fit of anger. What could have caused it? Was it simply because of a few choice nuts, which weren’t even valuable? Every precious thing in the world was there!”

Rabbi Meir continued his account: “I spoke to this Roman and said to him, ‘Why did you do this?’ He turned to me and shouted, ‘You Jews say that the World to Come belongs to you. But we have only this world. If I don’t take advantage of this world, then when can I take advantage of anything? That’s why I don’t want my table to be lacking even the smallest thing. I want everything! And if I don’t have everything, I have nothing.’”

Thus Rabbi Dostai finally understood what King Solomon meant by the words, “The stomach of the wicked suffers want.” The wicked are never satisfied or happy. They always hunger for more, since there is no end to material desires.

They Made us Wicked

It is written, “The Egyptians mistreated us and afflicted us” (Deuteronomy 26:6).

The holy Alsheich (Rabbi Moshe ben Haim Alsheich) was surprised by this expression, questioning why it states vayarei’u otanu instead of vayarei’u lanu. He explains that vayarei’u otanu means that the Egyptians made us wicked. The forced labors that the Egyptians placed on us for numerous years changed our character for the worse, and we lost patience with others. We acted wickedly and cruelly towards one another.

The Greatest of All Blessings

It is written, “All these blessings will come upon you and overtake you if you will listen to the voice of the L-RD your G-d” (Deuteronomy 28:2).

Rabbi Yaakov Loeberbaum of Lisa (the author of Netivot HaMishpat) noted that our Sages have said: “There is no reward for mitzvot in this world” (Kiddushin 39b). It follows that all the good that the Holy One, blessed be He, pours upon those who perform mitzvot is solely meant to allow them to perform other mitzvot. Hence the verse states, “All these blessings will come upon you and overtake you” – in order for you to fulfill – “you will listen to the voice of the L-RD your G-d.”

Rabbi Israel Meir of Radin (the Chafetz Chaim) would say, “The Holy One, blessed be He, has many blessings at His disposition, but the greatest of all is ‘you will listen to the voice of the L-RD your G-d.’ Happy is the man who receives this blessing from Heaven, for the one who benefits from it will automatically merit every other blessing in the world.”

Parperaot LaTorah

All Jews are Responsible for One Another

It is written, “All these curses will come upon you and overtake you” (Deuteronomy 28:15).

There are only 49 curses found in the section on curses in the book of Leviticus, whereas here in the book of Deuteronomy there are 98 curses. The reason is that the curses in Leviticus were written before the Children of Israel took responsibility for their fellow Jews by an oath on Mount Gerizim and Mount Ebal, whereas the curses in Deuteronomy were stated after they took this oath. Hence the number of curses doubled, for they correspond to their own sins plus those of others.

Kli Yakar

What Does This Add?

It is written, “You will go mad from the sight of your eyes” (Deuteronomy 28:34).

Previous to this curse, the Torah already stated: “The L-RD will strike you with madness” (v.28). Therefore what does this verse add? The author of Ketzot HaChoshen states, “It seems that He wanted to add even more to the weight of the curses. Despite all the pain that going mad entails, a person who becomes mad does not sense it himself. That is, he is not distressed by his strange actions, for they seem perfectly normal to him. As for someone who is perfectly sane, if he is placed under the charge of person who has gone mad – one who makes him emulate his actions by acting just as mad – his suffering will be far worse, for he will be constantly aware that he is not acting normally. This is what constitutes the additional curse, ‘You will go mad from the sight of your eyes,’ for his actions will appear to him as mad, since his mind is lucid. Thus with his own eyes he will see the consequences of his wicked deeds.”

MiShulchan Gavoha

Who Separates Israel from the Nations

It is written, “There you will serve other gods of wood and stone, and you will be a source of astonishment, a parable, and a conversation piece among all the peoples” (Deuteronomy 28:36-37).

A convert to Christianity complained to Rabbi Chaim of Volozhin that before his conversion he suffered greatly at the hands of his non-
Jewish neighbors, who mocked him for his Judaism. This is why he had begun eating with them. Having noticed that this was useless, the man began to profane Shabbat, but that too was useless. He eventually converted, with the thought that they would finally stop bothering him. Nevertheless, they continued to scorn and despise him. Rabbi Chaim told him that this was alluded to in the Torah: “There shall you serve other gods of wood and stone” – and yet – “you will be a source of astonishment, a parable, and a conversation piece” – for they will continue to scorn you.

Overview of the Parsha

At the end of the mitzvot given in the book of Deuteronomy, we find mitzvot that touch upon speech, such as those pertaining to the consecration of various things at the end of the book of Leviticus, as well the vows and oaths at the end of the book of Numbers, meaning first fruits and tithes, wherein we say something before Hashem. The parsha also describes the deep bond between Hashem and His people. The people then receive the commandment to engrave the Torah upon rocks that are to be set up for the recitation of the blessings and curses when the people cross the Jordan. The covenant in the plains of Moab stresses the importance of the Torah, upon which this covenant is based.

The Creation of the Woman

It is written, “The L-RD G-d built the side…into a woman” (Genesis 2:22). The Holy One, blessed be He, caused the man to fall into a deep sleep, and from one of his ribs He decided to create the woman. The term vayiven (“and He built”) can also be understood in the sense of hitbonenut (“contemplation”), meaning that the Creator of the universe contemplated, as it were, from which of man’s limbs to create the woman, given that everything in creation should resemble its source and share the same essence. Hashem said: “I will not create her from the head, lest she be light-headed; nor from the eye, lest she be a flirt; nor from the ear, lest she be an eavesdropper; nor from the mouth, lest she be a gossip – and it is not fitting for a daughter of Israel to speak excessively or derivisely – nor from the heart, lest she be prone to jealousy – meaning that she will never be content with what she has, and she will always want more, thereby making her husband’s life bitter – nor from the hand, lest she be prone to touching everything; nor from the foot, lest she be a gadabout – loving to go out and never wanting to stay home, for her feet will always be wandering outside. If the goal of the woman is to watch over the conduct of her household, how will she be able to do this if she is always outside? None of these limbs are fitting for the making of the woman, lest her nature emulate one of them. Instead I will create her from the modest part of man, for even when he stands naked, that part is covered.”

The Sages have also said that as Hashem created each limb in her, He said: “Be a modest woman.” This teaches us that a woman’s basic nature is exemplified by modesty. Since the Holy One, blessed be He, created a woman in modesty, this trait is the key to true happiness. That is, a woman who fails to be modest can never be happy.

REASONS FOR THE MITZVOT

Blessed is He Who Gives Good Advice

_It is written, “Cursed is he who causes the blind to go astray on the road” (Deuteronomy 27:18)._ Rashi explains this as referring to giving bad advice to a person who is blind in a certain area. Our Sages have said that all the curses were preceded by blessings (Sotah 37b), meaning that before the Levites recited, “Cursed is he who causes the blind to go astray on the road,” they said: “Blessed is he who gives good advice.” The Sefer HaChinuch (Mitzvah 232) states that we must not deceive a Jew by giving him bad advice. When a Jew asks for advice, we must give him what we feel is good and right for him. The reason is that effective leadership consists of guiding people and giving them good advice regarding all their endeavors.

The book Sheal Avicha Veyagedcha (part I) recounts a story involving Rabbi Yehoshua Leib Diskin Zatzal, known as the Maharil Diskin. Several people in Jerusalem once came to the Rav and told him that the grandson of one of Jerusalem’s shochatim had gone to study in a secular school, and therefore they felt that they should prohibit the shochet from practicing his trade. The Rav listened to them and said, “You are certainly correct, but it is impossible to deprive a shochet of his livelihood. Therefore you must definitely find him another job, and then you will have to convince him to leave his position as a shochet.”

The people listened to the Rav and did as he had advised. They found another job for the man, and then they tried to convince him to willingly give up his job as a shochet. He listened to what they had to say, but did not respond. In fact he went to see the Maharil Diskin in order to ask him for advice. When he asked him what he should do, the Rav said: “It isn’t worth it for you to leave your job as a shochet.” When the man heard this, he decided to remain in his position. The people then came to him and asked why he refused to leave his job, to which he replied: “I went to see Rav Diskin, and he said that it wasn’t worth it for me to give up my job as a shochet.” The people were stunned by this, and so they returned to the Rav and asked him: “Didn’t the Rav agree that the shochet should leave his profession if we found him another job? We went to great lengths to find him another job, and we tried to convince him to leave. So why did the Rav prevent him from doing so?”

The Rav replied, “What do you mean – why did I prevent him from leaving? He came to me for advice, and the best advice for him was not to quit his job as a shochet. That’s what’s best for him. For reasons of religious fervor, however, you want him to quit. However to make him quit against his will is impossible. When he comes to me for advice, I have to give him the best advice possible, for how can I make him stumble? Is it not written: ‘Cursed is he who causes the blind to go astray on the road’? If he tells me that this is what’s good for him, I won’t make him stumble, for how can I bring such a curse upon myself?”
Rabbi Yehonatan Eibeshutz Zatzal was a gaon in the entire Torah, as well as a gaon in the wisdom of Kabbalah. He was born in Krakow (some say Pinshov) to Rabbi Nathan Neta, the Av Beit Din of Eibeshutz and a descendant of the kabbalist Rabbi Nathan Shapira of Krakow (the author of Megaleh Amukot).

Rabbi Yehonatan lost his father in his youth, and the Eibeshutz community took responsibility for his studies at the yeshiva of the gaon Rabbi Meir Eisenstadt in Prosnitz. There he elevated himself in the rungs of Torah and the fear of Heaven to such an extent that all who saw him were amazed by his intelligence and incredible diligence in Torah study. As soon as he turned 18, he was named as a Dayan in Bomsala, the town where his father-in-law, Rabbi Yitzchak Shapira, lived. In 5470 Rabbi Yehonatan moved to Prague, where he taught Torah for several years, and whose name is forever connected to his own. It was in Prague that he organized numerous discussions with Christian priests over questions of religion and Torah, discussions from which he always emerged victorious. In 5500, as Prague was under siege, he was chosen as the Rav and Av Beit Din of Metz, and in 5509 he was appointed as the Rav and Av Beit Din of Altona, Hamburg, and Vedsbeck. He put even greater effort into Torah study, and people realized that he also could perform miracles. He used segulot and amulets to a great extent, and thus he would heal the sick.

At the same time, because of his segulot, he was struck by the fire of Dayan, he taught Torah to students who avidly drank in his words. Rabbi Yehonatan and Rabbi Yossi entrusted their money-bags to him. Rabbi Meir did not entrust his money-bag to him. Instead he went and placed it on the grave of that man’s father. Thereupon the man had a vision in his dream [saying]: “Go, take the money-bag lying at the head of this man!” In the morning [the innkeeper] told [the Rabbis] about it, saying: “This is what appeared to me in my dream.” They answered him, “There is no substance in the dream of the Sabbath night.” Rabbi Meir went, waited there all day, and then took the money-bag with him. In the morning [the Rabbis] said to him: “Give us our money-bags.” He said: “You never left them with me!” Rabbi Meir then said to them: “Why don’t you pay attention to people’s names?” They said: “Why did you not tell us this?” He answered: “Consider it as simply being a suspicion. I would not consider it a definite presumption!” Thereupon they took [the host] into a store [and gave him wine to drink]. When they saw lentils on his moustache, they went to his wife and gave her that as a sign [i.e., they said that her husband had sent them for their money-bags, and as proof they told her that lentils had been the last meal eaten in her home], and thus obtained their money-bags and took them back. [The innkeeper] then went and killed his wife. It is with regards to this incident that it was taught: “… [Failure to observe the custom of] mayim acharonim slew a person.” In the end, they also paid close attention to people’s names. – Yoma 83b

Rabbi Yosef was upset by the length of the eulogy. Before the man was finally laid to rest, however, one rabbi from Lvov began delivering a very lengthy eulogy. He read it from a prepared text, and it lasted much too long. Rabbi Yosef was upset by the length of the eulogy, and he said to those close to him: “The Sages have said that ‘every plague that is not written’ [Deuteronomy 28:61] refers to the death of the tzaddikim. Yet here I see the opposite: The death of the tzaddikim is a plague that is written!”
